THE THREE TORNADOES AND HILLARY CLINTON

Several years ago, when Hillary Clinton was the Senator from New York, I had a very strong, clear dream. In this dream I was in a hotel in a major city (I am uncertain which city it was). I was with a group of young people who were a part of the ministry. As we were walking, I observed a very large tornado moving toward the very heart (downtown) of this city. We were attempting to "get out" before the main area.

As we drove out of the city, we headed on a very straight and narrow road. To my surprise, I observed Hillary Clinton to be standing on the road, standing in a large open field, sporting a very bright yellow pants suit outfit. Behind her, in the far distance were three very large tornados beginning to form. I knew that she would need to deal with these three storms that were coming. I was impressed with the fact that the tornados were of equal length, and were very, and I mean very long, extending from the height of the sky toward the ground.

At the time, she was the Senator from New York and I questioned if these three storms would involve the state of New York. Then she became a candidate for President. This too intrigued me. Would she be the leader of the nation when these storms struck? When she was selected, she chose here to be the Secretary of State. This is the fifth highest position of authority in the Executive Branch of the government. This important position enables the Secretary to deal directly with nations, often through our ambassadors positioned around the world.

The symbolism in the dream is clear. The tornado in the city is a future storm. It could allude to a series of terrorist's attacks or a period of unrest that will come to this particular city. The field is the world (Matthew 13:38). Now that Mrs. Clinton is the Secretary of State, this indicates she will need to deal with three conflicts (tornados) that will come behind her during her administration. These storms were very large and were unseen by her. This indicates something occurring suddenly and unexpected. They were all three lined up side by side.

It is interesting to note that there are two areas of the world that presently are causing great distress among the democratic world. One is North Korea, whose demented leader recently tested a nuclear bomb and is testing long range missiles capable of reaching the United States. He has boldly defied the United States and has threatened to use nuclear weapons against his enemies. It is a major threat to the security of the west and to those living south of North Korea, namely the South Korean citizens.

At the same time that North Korea is saber rattling, the country of Iran is becoming a volcano with a political fire burning in the nation, with the controversial re-election of Ahmadinejad. This fanatical Islamic leader is presently enriching 5,000 centrifuges in which uranium can be used for a nuclear warhead and placed on their missiles. A former military general from Iraq, stated 2 years ago that Iran could reach into Israel and Europe, but did not at the time have their warheads perfected. According to some, within 6 to 18 months they will have their nuclear weapon they desire with missile capability.

While it is too early to tell, it may be possible that these two nations, North Korea and Iran, are two of the storms that we are presently preparing to come on the field (the world) scene. Several years ago President Bush made a State of the Union address, prior to that time that an "axis of evil" existed that could be very dangerous in the future. He named Iraq, Iran and North Korea. Following the speech, the news networks not only rebuked the president but mocked his statement, warning America about the possible dangers. Well, Bush was wrong, the media was wrong.

As time moves forward, we will understand more clearly what these three long (this may allude to the length of time these storms represent). Whatever they allude to, the Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton will find it necessary to deal with the storms. We should be vigilant and continue in prayer for the safety of our nation.
